

Two lies, one truth

Aim	To get to know each other; to learn new and/or fun facts about the others; to learn that it's not always easy to distinguish between truth and lie
Duration	5-15 min depending on the group. It might be a good idea to agree on the duration of the exercise in advance
Number of participants	any - better for small groups
Difficulty	easy
Conditions	Circle of chairs
Material	Green and red cards, sheets of paper, pens
Preparation	-

Description

The participants receive one red and one green card each as well as one sheet of paper. Ask them to write three statements about themselves. Only one of the statements should be true, the other two are lies. Afterwards, the statements are read aloud in turn. The members of the group use the red and green cards to vote whether the respective statement is true or false.

After the exercise, point out that on the internet it is much more difficult to determine what is true or false and that it is important to be cautious when it comes to trusting strangers on the web!
